News from members, associated members and Networks of which ENMCR is a member
On 28 and 29 May 2008, the International Childhood and Youth Research Network held its first international conference: Child & Youth Research in the 21st Century: A Critical Appraisal, hosted by the Centre for the Study of Childhood and Adolescence, European University Cyprus, Nicosia. Approximately 150-200 childhood and youth researchers from all over the world participated in the conference. The workshops and sessions were manifold, themes varying from child-led research, children as social actors (in school, communities etc.), working methods of large child organisations, child rights, children in foster care to children dropping out of school were discussed and participants engaged in a very lively and enhancing exchange of their projects and work.
The keynote speech by Judith Ennew was true to the title of the conference: “A Critical Appraisal” of the 21st Century Childhood and Youth research practices. She appraised the work of many actors in promoting childhood and in particular child rights studies, yet also highly criticized the goal-oriented approaches of large child organisations, such as UNICEF and Save the Children, instead of taking more culturally and region sensitive approaches in their working. Several members of ENMCR attended conference: Representatives from INA-FU Berlin, Germany; UvA, The Netherlands; University of Minho and University of Beira, Portugal; University of South Bohemia, Czech Republic participated and presented papers.
For further information on the conference, please consult ICYRnet’s website: www.icyrnet.net or contact the coordinator Christos Chrysanthou directly at: C.Chrysanthou@euc.ac.cy

General Assembly of ICYRnet
Following the conference, on May 30, 2008, ICYRnet held its first General Assembly, in which details on registration as private limited company and the composition of the board were discussed. Ideas for future collaboration and activities of the network were discussed as well. For further more detailed information, you may contact the coordinator: Christos Chrysanthou: C.Chrysanthou@euc.ac.cy

EU-Commission to promote better conditions for researchers in Europe (“fifth freedom”)

The EC has proposed the member states a European partnership for researchers under the motto: “Better career opportunities and increased mobility” strategies are presented to facilitate hiring and exchange of researchers across Europe. The EU Commissioner for Research, Janez Potocnik said: Too many researchers have to wait too long for their chance to really work independently because of old regulations and procedures. Therefore our aim is to create “the fifth freedom” - the free knowledge exchange- so that students, researchers and academics can become active and work in many EU member states. The proposed partnership aims at producing fast measurable changes by 2010. The initiative is one of five political initiatives that the EC had envisioned in the aftermath of the 2007 green paper: “The European Research Area: New Perspectives”.

Remembrance of happenings in 2000, in view of rumours about planned raids against children in Asunción Paraguay:
The coordination for the rights of the child and young people has issued a communication stating that there are several rumours about planned raids against poor children and young people in Paraguay. In order to raise awareness, the office is reminding the public of similar actions which occurred in 2000: During the state led raids, children were separated violently and abruptly from their parents and placed into institutions. E.g. a 6 month old boy was “deposited” in care centre led by the municipality, where he was kept until he reached the age of 6 years. The boy was left abandoned by the institutions. This is just one of various cases and the aim at the moment is to make these happenings known to as many people as possible in order to prevent similar things from happening again now.

European Parliament is taking a political stand against child trafficking
On June 4, MEP Marusya Lyubcheva pleaded for the European Parliament to recognize the fight against child trafficking as a priority for the EU and to enhance transnational cooperation, to support authorities and NGOs to shape adequate responses to prevent, protect and provide adequate treatment to victims by launching of the EP "Written Declaration (n. 50) on combating the trafficking of children". To become official, this Declaration must get 400 signatures out of the 785 MEPs by October 2008. Benefiting from the know-how of expert NGOs is key to shape adequate policy at EU level, continued Lyubcheva that is why she invited Terre des Hommes to support the EP in this. The Declaration is calling on the EU Council and Parliament to provide the necessary resources to fight child trafficking in the framework of the Commission's strategy on the rights of the child.
For the first time, the EP is clearly focusing on the very issue of child trafficking as a priority in the perspective of a future EU strategy on the rights of the child. This shows that the EU is progressively addressing child trafficking as a specific policy area, and not only as a sub-category of trafficking in persons, stated Salvatore Parata, from TDHIF Brussels office. The challenge for the EU is still to shape specific anti-child-trafficking programs and allocate respective resources. The Declaration launched by MEP Lyubcheva is an important step towards that target.
ENMCR welcomes the activity, would nonetheless also point out, that it is important not to lose out of sight other child rights violations and breaches by concentrating on sexual exploitation and trafficking.

Publications

_Iván Rodríguez Pascual (2008): Para una sociología de la infancia: aspectos teóricos y metodológicos_
The study of children and the socio-cultural aspects involved in what we call “childhood” is on the rise. In this book (“For a sociology of childhood: theoretical and methodological aspects”) the constitutional aspects of the sociology of childhood are described and explained, comparing them with the theoretical focus of classical sociology and taking into account the theoretical development of its main authors and schools. Equal attention is given to the methodological aspects of childhood studies, which promotes a change of view from an adult-centric approach to that of giving children's voices the fundamental importance they deserve, in order to understand their life worlds and views. The book closes with a reflection upon the status of children in modern societies and names some social indicators to make this nearly invisible population more visible.

Please find following the link to Plan’s annual “State of the World’s Girls” Report. This is the second in a series of 7 annual reports on the situation of girls around the world that will take us up to the deadline of the MDGs. This series of reports is also accompanied by a cohort study, in which we will follow the lives of 70 girls and see what issues they face, and how their lives change over the next 7 years. 1 in 5 countries have used girls as child soldiers, and 100,000 are currently fighting in conflicts around the world, reveals a new report by Plan. Conflict can also force girls from their homes, leave them caring for younger siblings or at risk from rape, beatings and abduction. These shocking revelations are included in Plan’s annual ‘Because I am a Girl’ report, which this year focuses on girls and conflict. Plan is now calling on the United Nations to allow girls to bring complaints against their leaders if their lives have been damaged by war. Child Soldiers Global Report 2008 published
The Coalition to Stop the Use of Child Soldiers has released its third edition of the global report on Child Soldiers. It demonstrates the near global consensus that children should not be used as soldiers and how strenuous international efforts have failed to protect tens of thousands of children from war. When armed conflict exists, children will almost inevitably become involved as soldiers. According to the report, worldwide there are about 250,000 children involved in armed conflict and war, the most child soldiers are recruited in Burma/Myanmar, other countries with alarmingly high numbers of child soldiers are the Democratic Republic of Congo and Colombia. The report draws a dark picture for these children the situation has hardly improved over the past 4 years. Even though there has been slight progress in combating the use of child soldiers (the conflicts in which children are involved has decreased from 27 to 17 worldwide, mainly due to conflicts ending in Africa). The report covers the period April 2004 to October 2007. To read the complete report, visit: www.childsoldiersglobalreport.org/. No One to Turn To- The under-reporting of child sexual exploitation and abuse by aid workers and peacekeepers- Report by Save the Children UK
Despite recent political commitments by governments and international organisations to tackle this problem, the report exposes the chronic under-reporting of such abuse, which leaves many children around the world suffering in silence. Children told Save the Children UK that they were too afraid to report the abuse, frightened that if they did the abuser might come back and hurt them, that aid agencies might stop helping them, or that they might be stigmatised by their family and community, or even punished by them. This suggests that for every case of abuse that is identified, there are likely to be many more that go unreported. Save the Children UK's research in Ivory Coast, Southern Sudan and Haiti shows that children as young as six are being abused by adults working for the international community. The children interviewed highlighted many different types of abuse, including trading food for sex, rape, child prostitution, pornography, indecent sexual assault and trafficking of children for sex. Recommendations for combating the problems are also put forward. For the full report, visit: http://www.savethechildren.org.uk/en/54_5706.htm

Study on Child Poverty (Progress programme)

Children growing up in poverty and exclusion are likely to become entangled in a “cycle” which is transmitted from generation to generation. Child Poverty is a denial of children’s rights, entailing inequality of access to resources and opportunities and is often linked to discrimination. It has severe long-term consequences, preventing children from achieving their full potential, adversely affecting their health, and inhibiting their personal development, education and general well-being.

Tackling child poverty and breaking the spiral of poverty and exclusion from one generation to the next features high on the European Union’s political agenda. Child poverty is recognised as a multi-dimensional problem which requires urgent, integrated actions across a wide range of social, economic and cultural policies.
